Bryon Mills is the director for public sector national accounts within Kaplan University's strategic relationships sector. In this role he oversees business development and relationship management between the University and governmental organizations except military. His focus is to decrease barriers to higher education through organizational partnerships for federal, state, and local civil servants, including first responders, administrators, and organized labor.

Bryon spent nearly three decades in the U.S. Air Force as a pilot, fiscal planner, and commander in the U.S., Europe, Middle East, and South Pacific, retiring at the rank of colonel. He followed with business development for an aerospace company, government and management consulting, and serving in various roles with nonprofit agencies before joining Kalan University in late 2015. He has served with the Chambers of Commerce in three cities, twice chaired his city's capital improvements committee, was certified as a large installation senior emergency on-scene commander, and been the primary organization interface with local and national media. Bryon holds a bachelor's degree from the US Air Force Academy, a master's degree from Webster University, and completed all levels of Professional Military Education. He lives in Cibolo, Texas, part of the greater San Antonio area.
