Scott A. Kilgore is the senior vice president (SVP) of Military Affairs, Kaplan University. Since joining Kaplan University in November of 2004, he has successfully leveraged technology and analytics as well as the ability to scale operations in an effort to improve the student experience outside of the classroom. Prior to becoming the SVP of Military Affairs, Scott served as the SVP of Student Services where he increased student enrollments 248% while improving the actual start rate. The percentage of students that enrolled and started attending classes resulted in improvements of over 1,700 basis points. Scott was also instrumental in establishing a dedicated military admissions team and is presently in the process of developing a dedicated Military Student Support Team designed to streamline and improve the military student experience in and outside of the classroom.

Prior to joining Kaplan University, Scott spent 12 years working in all capacities of the tele-services industry, assisting Fortune 500 companies to achieve their marketing objectives. Scott received his commission via ROTC as a U.S. Army officer and served in a number of command and staff positions in the Cavalry and Infantry branches.

Scott earned his bachelor's degree from the University of Nebraska, Omaha and his master's degree from the University of Iowa. Scott is married with three children. His youngest daughter is special needs and he and his wife Amy are quite active working closely with organizations and families to advance the causes of those with disabilities.
